

Asset-Building Ideas for Religious Educators

Chances are good that one reason you agreed to teach a religious education class is that you care a lot about young people and want to see them thrive. Your commitment to young people and your involvement in their lives can have a big impact on their developmental assets as well as on their spiritual growth. Here are some things you can do to help build their assets:

- Show each young person in your class or group that you care about her or him. Greet each one personally. Notice when they are absent. Say hi to them outside of the religious education hours.
- Create a climate in which young people's opinions and experiences are valued and respected.
- Let children and youth help choose and adapt the curriculum you use.
- Connect classroom learning with service to others. Have your class play with or read books to children in the nursery. Have your class prepare and teach a class to younger children about peaceful conflict resolution.
- Be clear about how you expect the young people in your class or group to behave. Set and enforce clear and fair ground rules. Teach young people the boundaries on behaviors that are integral to the life of a believer in your faith tradition.
- Create meaningful activities for young people that help them stretch and grow, not just fill up the time you have together. You can start by involving them in planning and leadership.
- Make lessons interesting, engaging, and relevant to young people's lives. Be creative not only with the content but also with the format. Do some hands-on activities or games that teach and are fun. Take the young people on a short field trip during your time together.
- Give young people opportunities to learn, practice, and teach social competencies. Role play different ways to respond to situations. Tie in a passage from a sacred text to a specific social competency asset, such as asset #33 (interpersonal competence), which is about friendship and treating others well.
- Help shape young people's personal identity by helping them internalize their faith and discover their own sense of purpose.
- Find other teachers who are interested in asset building. Meet together on a regular basis to share ideas, to discuss problems and possibilities, and to celebrate what's working in your classroom.
- Nurture your own development as a teacher and a person of faith. Build on the strength of the assets you have.
